Back in the early colonial times, slaves and indentured servants worked for their masters. A slave is a person who is from Africa is enslaved and worked for people in the colonies. A indentured servant are people who agreed to work for a person in the colonies. They are from Europe. They both had a trip, worked for a period of time, and lived with a family.

They`re both alike because they had a trip. The servants had a nice cabin, but slaves were chained in the cargo bay. They couldn`t get fresh air like the servants. The servants had an individual cabin. However the slaves were stuck together. Servants were fed like regular passengers. Unlike slaves that were fed scraps.

They`re both alike because they worked for a period of time. Servants worked for an agreed time. It was usually 3-7 years. But slaves were owned for life. Very few slaves gained freedom.

They`re also alike because the worked with a family. Servants got paid and were treated well. Unlike slaves who were poorly treated. Servants learned a trade or skill. They were also educated, clothed, fed, and given good shelter. However slaves got no education, and they had to sleep in a bunk.

Indentured servants and slaves are alike and also different in their own ways. They were alike and different because they had a trip to the colonies worked a period of time. They also lived with a family. They both worked hard to survive.
